An essay is an argument. It is a type of essay in which the author demonstrates his or her view of a problem, describes his or her attitude, and gives arguments.

To begin with, let's look at the signs of an argumentative work, and then let's move on to examples and break down ready-made essays.

You can write an essay on any topic. For example, about a phenomenon, a book, an event, a firm. However, any essay corresponds to these distinguishing features:

- A clearly defined topic (there can only be one);
- subjective view of the author on the problem;
- small volume (3-7 pages for students and 1-2 for children);
- free composition;
- a relaxed narrative;
- presence of paradoxes (in the topic or in the reasoning);
- semantic unity (consistency of theses and arguments).

Before writing, it is important to clearly define the topic (problem), scope, and objectives of each paragraph.

A good topic for an essay is one that covers philosophical, moral, and social problems. It is better to take them for writing an essay CustomWriting.

Examples of essays

Here are ready papers that will help you understand the principle. Example of a good essay Documents in my life:

Documents are a product of civilization and society. In our country and any other developed country, they play a crucial role.

It is human nature to organize the surrounding reality so that it is easier to navigate in it. Documents are one of the tools of this organization. They help organize information and data about a person or events. That's why it's hard to imagine our world without them.

Documents are not a simple and ancient phenomenon. The birth of writing marked the passage of human civilization into the Information Age. Thanks to graphic signs and systems, we now have the ability to separate information from an object and retain it by writing it down on some medium.

Since people need agreements among themselves in order to exist peacefully, it is the right that has become the main domain of documents. A document can give a right to something or take it away to allow or forbid action. Documents confirm something, refute it, prove it.

For example, if a person needs to go to another city, it will be difficult for him to do so without tickets. Tickets in this case are a document that confirms a person's ability and right to change his location. In turn, the right to buy tickets give a passport or birth certificate, which indicates that a person is a citizen of the country.

Or a medical policy. It gives the right to receive medical care. No matter what we encounter, we will almost always need a certain list of documentation. Moving, getting married, starting a company, buying or building a house, getting an education, finding a job or taking out a loan all require documentation. Which help streamline life.

Now the Information Age is at a new stage in its development. The Internet and new technologies have appeared. Therefore, documents are gradually changing their appearance, penetrating deeper and deeper into our lives.

Another sample essay. A short short text on the topic of Mine is better than ours:

The problem of the own and the common has existed throughout human existence. However, before we proceed to parsing the meaning of this expression, we should look at its history. Its author was Benjamin Franklin. And he spoke of property.

Human nature is possessive. We have been used from ancient times to protect our territory. It was necessary for survival. So what belongs specifically to me is usually valued above what belongs to us.

Of course, in history, collective property has not always been valued lower than individual property. For example, the Spartans who once lived, on the contrary, did not recognize the latter and even encouraged stealing. But then again: stealing is appropriation. Yourself, mine. Mine.

In the Soviet Union, too, a collectivist culture prevailed. But history has shown that this was no more than an idea that was alien to human nature. This can be seen even in the behavior of children who do not want to share their favorite toy.

We live in an era of the cult of individuality and individualism. This also affects the concept of mine. Private property is now one of the leading principles of the economy and everyone has the right to own it. And with it we get more freedom and the right to choose.

Thus, man is individualistic. And he is more inclined to value his own thoughts and things. Rarely is collective property contained more and better than private property.

Both 2 and 1 essays are coherent, contain examples and argumentation, and are thought-provoking.

Essay Template

There is no single essay template. Usually it is set by the teacher or the situation (for example, there is one template in the USE in social studies, another in Russian language, and a third in the homework for the 4th grade).

However, there is a similar structure and principles of writing:

Introduction. It is worth starting with the main idea. Vivid phrases in the introduction are welcome.
